I researched my MD thesis on Gonadal function after cytotoxic insult in childhood in Manchester, as a Leukaemia Research Fund Clinical Research Fellow supervised by Prof Stephen Shalet. I was awarded MD University of London in 1992. The thesis studied gonadal function following treatment for childhood cancer, with particular emphasis on reversibility of testicular damage and disturbance of ovarian function. I developed an estimate of the radiosensitivity of the human oocyte, which I have subsequently modified and refined. This thesis also contained the first report of gonadal dysfunction following the treatment of osteosarcoma with cis-platinum.

SUMMARY

Clinical: As a paediatric oncologist, I provide a service to the South-East of Scotland. I have shown evidence of substantial commitment to developing and improving the service, with the development of the day care centre and additional funding for nursing care. Strong links have been built up with the voluntary sector (CLIC Sergeant, and Macmillan) to develop the outreach oncology service and home from home family accommodation. I have developed strong shared-care relationships with other departments and geographical areas. I have established a multidisciplinary tumour board for both brain tumours and other solid tumours for management, education and audit of all new cases. I chair the National MDT for childhood solid tumours.

Research: I have a passionate commitment to developing multidisciplinary research into the late effects of the treatment of childhood cancer. I am the principle investigator and director of the HEBA centre for late effects of the treatment of childhood cancer. I have edited jointly with Dan Green (USA) a multi-author textbook on the Late Effects of the Treatment of Childhood Cancer, published January 2004.

In collaboration with my colleagues (Profs. Kelnar, Anderson, Sharpe and Saunders) at the centre for reproductive biology we have appointed a research fellow to explore the possibility of harvesting and cryopreserving stem cells from the pre-pubertal testis using mouse and Marmoset models. The possibility of xenografting pre-pubertal testicular tissue to preserve fertility in young boys receiving treatment for cancer will be explored using an animal model.

In collaboration with Professor Tom W. Kelsey (University of St Andrews). We have developed a model for NGF decline from conception to menopause and a normative validated model of AMH throughout life. We are working on developing other models using machine science to generate hypotheses that can be tested in the clinic and laboratory We are currently working on an app to assess ovarian reserve in healthy women.

I was Chief Investigator in the UK for a clinical trial for children and young people up to the age of 18 years with classical Hodgkin's lymphoma (EuroNet-PHL-C1). This study is supported by an approx. £400K grant from CRUK. (2008).

Leadership: I have been a member of several national working parties (RCOG and BFS) representing the RCPCH as an expert in fertility preservation and assessment of young people with cancer. Recently I have led a UK children's cancer study group project to assess current fertility preservation strategies for young patients with cancer. I chaired the SIGN guideline on the late effects of the treatment of cancer (SIGN No. 76), by common agreement one of the most ambitious SIGN guidelines yet to be supported. Since 1998 I have been chair of the Scottish Paediatric Haematology Oncology Group (SPHOG). I was elected onto the UKCCSG executive in 2002 with a major responsibility to represent the specialty groups' interests at the RCPCH and became secretary in January 2005. In 2002 I took over the chair of the UK children's cancer group working party on Hodgkin's Lymphoma. This carries with it a responsibility to develop and implement a new National and European collaborative Hodgkin's Lymphoma treatment protocol. After several years of working with our European colleagues, I was elected first president of the European Network for Paediatric Hodgkin's Lymphoma. We have two pan-European trials about to open for Hodgkin's Lymphoma. This has been a major step forward for Hodgkin's Lymphoma in children and young adults, and will be the largest paediatric Hodgkin's Lymphoma trial in the world with fourteen countries in Europe participating. More recently I was appointed in December 2007 Lead Clinician for the Children and Teenagers Scottish Cancer Network (CATSCAN). This has led to improved multi-disciplinary working across Scotland for the benefit of children and young people with Cancer or Leukaemia. During 2011-12. I was elected to the position of Registrar of the RCPCH in 2011. I led on Invited Reviews and clinical governance for the college. I fronted up the decision by the RCPCH to withdraw their support for the Health and Social Care bill in 2012, and provided a number of radio and TV interviews. In 2015 I was appointed National Clinical Director of the Managed Service Network for children and young people with cancer (Scotland).
